action of the allied governments in placing cotton on the contraband list, the British embassy here has issued a statement on behalf of the British military authorities, designed to show the extensive use of cotton for military

The statement points out that in the form of guncotton a quarter of a pound of the staple is required to pro-duce one pound of ballistite; cordite requires four-tenths of a pound of cotton for a pound, and the nitro-cellucotton for a pound, and the nitro-ceilu-lose powders in military use consist practically entirely of guncotton. Other military uses of cotton mentioned are in the making of clothing, sheeting tents, ammunition bags and mining explosives.

In conclusion it is declared that even if substitutes for cotton were possible the fact that it can be used for military purposes justifies its classification as contraband.

Discussing the park system of the District. Senator Works says:

"The District of Columbia has good reason to be proud of her parks. Most of them are very small and Rock Creek Park, the largest of them all, has not been made what it should be in the interest of the whole people. It is essentially a rich man's park.

or carriage by beautiful drives. The acquisition and improvement of the park is to be highly commended, but its advantages and the pleasure to be derived from it are confined to a comparatively few people who really need it the least.

The same may be said of Potomac Park. There are no buildings, no play grounds, no stadiums, no places of recreation, no place where the people are provided with any conveniences for meting together to listen to music or enjoy other sources of amusement or pleasure in Potomac or Rock. Creek parks. They are not accessible to the general public by any cheap means of travel and only long distance peeds trians are able to see or enjoy them on foot. If the parks are intended and designed exclusively as beautiful driveways, they are a great success, but if the property of the projection of the property of the projection o signed exclusively as beautiful driverways, they are a great success, but if they are intended for the enjoyment of the general public, as I think they should be, they need much to make them suitable and accessible for such a purpose. In this respect they do not compare with the parks of other large cities, in area, accessibility and fitness for park purposes. for park purposes.

In Thickly Populated Sections. "In the thickly populated downtown sections of the city ample and beautiful parks and circles which may be called parks are provided and are well kept up. But unfortunately there this much-desired provision for outdoor pleasure and fresh air and sunshine stops. While provision has been made for the extension of all streets to the outer sections of the District on the broad lines of the plan of the original city of Washington, no provision has been made for parks, large or small, in these outside sections that are fast coming into the city and becoming thickly populated. This is a serious oversight.

"The people residing in these sections need the open parks even more than most of the people downtown because of the inaccessibility to them of the larger parks, the resort of the people who ride in their automobiles. These people pay their share of the taxes used for the acquisition and upkeep of the larger and the downtown parks and should have local parks of upkeep of the larger and the downtown parks and should have local parks of their own, and this will not be made a model city until this is done.

"It is maintained by some that it is unfair to tax the people for one-half of the expense of acquiring and keeping up an unusually large and expensive park system for the capital. But this claim is surfounded.
